

Parents V.S. Teenagers

At my house, there are many different rules that I have to follow. Some of them I don't like, and others seem pretty fair. When it comes to the consequences when broken, they are pretty harsh. There are a few rules that if are broken that the consequence aren't too bad though. I think that my rules mostly come from the rules they growing up.

I have a lot of rules at my house. They vary from being and doing things with friends, to what I say. For instance, I'm not allowed to ride with teenagers in a car. Or am I allowed to ride four wheelers without my parents there. Most of the rules I have I think are reasonable. They are pretty flexible with some rules to. Like the rule with teenagers and cars. If my mom approves of the driver, then I can get a ride to certain places.

Now, when these rules get broken, the consequences can be rough. No matter what the rule is, the consequence is usually the same: getting the phone taken away, no video games, and no going anywhere. I think that the taking of the phone is too much though. Even though they are harsh punishments, it definitely keeps me from breaking the rules very often. But I will admit to breaking them some times.

My parents for the most part use these rules because it's what they had as kids. They enforce these rules because they love me and don't want me to get hurt. So in a way, I'm glad they have some of the rules. In the long run, I'm sure I will thank them.